ONLINE VISITORS

Starting with a single central library in 1857, the Springfield City Library now maintains nine neighborhood locations throughout our city of over 153,000 residents. A snapshot of usage statistics reveals that 705,700 visitors came into our libraries; 61,000 adults, teens, and children participated in 6,300 programs; and 712,705 items circulated to our 78,622 registered borrowers, 29.3% of those cardholders are under the age of 18. Statistics are a five-year average.

Today, Springfield City Library receives nearly 1 million visitors in person and online each year who take advantage of the many resources and programs available. Families with young children attend story times and educational programs designed to improve early childhood literacy and to promote reading success by 4th grade. Teens and tweens avail themselves of after school programs and activities including help with homework, leadership development boards, and the library's exciting plans for a digital media creation lab. Adult visitors received assistance with job seeking, career advancement, and computer skills. The Library also contributes to a sense of community through fun family programming and as a place for neighbors to gather and explore new ideas, perspectives, and worlds. Much of our programmatic work, services, and community engagement focuses on the priorities identified in the re:think Springfield City Library report of 2013. Key areas are: Adult Literacy and Lifelong Learning, After School (teens), Civic and Community Engagement, Customer Experience, Early Literacy, Elementary Age, and Workforce Development.

The Steering Committee reviewed results from many federal, city, and local surveys and studies to understand the demographic make-up of Springfield.

QUICK STATS

POVERTY RATE OF

30%

These included library usage statistics, as well as reports prepared locally by the Pioneer Valley Planning Commission, rethink: Springfield City Library, the Public Health Institute of Western Massachusetts, the City of Springfield's strategic plan, the Urban Library Council's Edge technology assessment, and a fundraising feasibility report. Nationally prepared reports consulted included the Aspen Report and strategic plans from libraries in New Haven, Hartford, and New Britain, CT; Worcester, MA; Sno-Isle, WA; and Salt Lake City, UT. Relevant statistics and notable trends include a high number (roughly 30%) of Springfield residents speaking Spanish at home; a fairly low percentage (18%) of college degree attainment; and poverty rate of nearly 30% of residents. These statistics suggest the need for the Library to consider social and wellbeing needs of residents when planning programs, collecting materials, hiring staff, and enacting policy. The trends point to the need for enhanced and visible community collaborations and partnerships; the need for the fostering of learning, creation, makerspaces, and related opportunities; a tapering down of circulation of library materials; steady program attendance numbers; public recognition of the library as a safe space; the vitality of the teen population and their interest in making a difference in their community; and a demand for more marketing of library offerings.

The Steering Committee created a public survey to gather input from library users and non-users. See Appendix for a copy. The survey was available in the library and promoted heavily on our website and social media accounts and announced through a news release. It was emailed to multiple contacts and networks. It was available in English, Spanish, Vietnamese, Russian, and Arabic. 863 surveys were returned; respondents answered 10 questions plus an open-ended question. Most people answered all questions. All quantifiable survey results were entered on a spreadsheet for analysis; open-ended responses were examined for recurring and trending themes.

KEY FINDINGS INCLUDE:

- An enduring role for the library as a source of books and other reading materials, with demand for new types of circulating items such as laptops, cookware, and tools
- A desire for an increased schedule of open hours, especially Fridays at the Central Library, expanded hours at Library Express at Pine Point, evening hours citywide, and Sunday hours in more locations
- A legacy of library use; grandparents and parents who grew up in libraries bring their children to the library, and cross-generational usages should be expanded
- A recognition that community connections are vital; reintroducing a bookmobile, partnering with schools, running a library card campaign, and targeting services for vulnerable populations are key strategies to fulfill this need
- A need to update and maintain facilities is critical; comfortable seating, improved phone systems, expanded parking, and better accessibility are needed
- A belief that libraries are key gathering spaces in the community; free, neutral community rooms are highly valued and more should be provided
- A core activity is programming and the demand for greater frequency and variety is high
- A recognition that great things are happening in the library and that better marketing, use of social media, and being out of the library and in the community are needed to bring this knowledge to the community
- A greater emphasis on welcoming, friendly customer service is needed, as well as high standards of training for all staff

PLANNING METHODOLOGY

The purpose of this project was to develop a new strategic plan for the Library through a results-oriented process that focuses on achieving the critical goals for the library in the next few years. Maureen Sullivan served as the consultant to the project. This project built upon the work the Library had been doing with the Edge Assessment, the Fundraising Feasibility Study, the re:think Springfield City Library sustainability study, and other work undertaken to understand the Springfield community.

Library Director Molly Fogarty formed a small steering committee that worked under the direction of the Library's Assistant Director for Public Services, Jean Canosa Albano, to develop the plan. The steering committee began its work in February 2019. Among the components of the process were: Open staff forums to inform and engage library staff; creation of a community engagement plan that included meetings across the city to engage community members and leaders in conversations about their hopes and aspirations for the future of the City of Springfield and to hear their ideas about how the Library can contribute to the fulfillment of these aspirations; sessions with the Library Commission; and administration of a community survey. A significant amount of information and ideas about the future of the Library were gathered in these meetings and work sessions.

In May and June, the steering committee met under the direction of consultant Maureen Sullivan to draft the new plan for the Library. The draft plan was presented to the Library Commission for discussion at its meeting on June 5. Their substantive comments have been incorporated into the final document, which received their approval on September 4, 2019.

GOVERNING BOARD APPROVAL
